Professor Rachael Taylor is the Karitane Fellow in Early Childhood Obesity and Deputy Head of the Department of Medicine and Director of the Edgar Diabetes and Obesity Research Centre, one of the University's flagship Research Centres. She has 20 years research experience and present research investigates how diet, sleep and physical activity impact on weight throughout the lifecycle, but particularly in children and adolescents. She also undertakes a variety of observational, prospective and interventional studies ranging from community-based initiatives in infants to personalized interventions in adults.
